

There is a tendency for many people to departmentalize concepts of love, peace, and harmony in the realm of the metaphysical or religious, then accept or reject these principles on that basis. Those of the metaphysical or deeply religious persuasion do have a special affinity for this triad, even contending that everyone has a duty to endorse these virtues. This is their view, and we will not argue the point. But that is not the premise upon which we choose to establish the validity of these concepts.
